Class of 2008

A letter from... the Dean of First-Year Students

Dr. Laurel B. Kennedy

Let's face it: you're going from the top of the heap-high school seniors-back to the bottom, as First Year students in college. This is one of the great drawbacks to progressing to ever-higher levels of learning: just when you've overcome all the social ills of the current level, and found some degree of comfort with yourself and your peers, you have to start over again. You may recall freshman year of high school, for example: it was great to have survived middle school, and exciting to finally be moving on to high school. But for a lot of people, freshman year of high school is tough. There is a flurry as everyone organizes themselves into cliques, usually along pretty arbitrary and senseless lines (how they dress, the sports they play or don't, the form their social lives take). Over four years, there's lots of drama and slow realignment of social groups, everyone lightens up, relaxes, and comes to appreciate each other, so that by graduation there is a reasonably strong sense of mutual acceptance and even fondness for one another. Senior year has an entirely different feel than freshman year, and most of that has to do with getting beyond social divisions and coming together as a class.

So, here you are in college. You have to start all over. The good news is that you can do it differently. If you're smart enough to be in college, then you're smart enough to know that you (and everyone in your class) are going to face all those same social anxieties all over again. Most of the people whose pictures appear in the book you hold have some anxieties about fitting in, finding a circle of friends, and making a handful of really tight friendships, of the kind that can sustain you when the chips are down.

You have options for how you're going to handle this transition. You can do it the way people did it in high school: seize the first couple of people who look just like you and hang on tight until you feel more confident. Or, you can look around, and look ahead, and see that over the next four years, your class is going to get close, develop its own character and make an enduring mark on you, on your classmates, and on the College.

The people pictured in this book will mean the most to you in the long run. You don't know them now, but in four years they'll be putting on black robes and mortar-boards right next to you, and they'll be cheering for you, and you for them, as you all cross the stage at Commencement. You'll have your own, unique history together.

So start now on making that history great. Get to know each other from the beginning. You only have four years together, and you only have four years here, on a little hill in a village in Ohio. Find out where everyone in your class is from, and whether they have a dog at home. See who left behind a little brother or sister who might visit sometime. Ask your international classmates about the life they left behind, and help them to understand and enjoy the life they're entering here. If you're from a small town, seek out the city kids. If you're from the city, find out what you share in common with those from small towns. Talk and talk and talk, and make sure no one gets left out. You'll never again have quite this many opportunities to learn and grow. You'll have others, but not this.

Celebrate that you are, together, the Class of 2008.

Letters from...

The President and Vice-President of DCGA

To the newest members of the Denison family...the Class of 2008—

Welcome to Denison! I hope that you are excited about becoming part of the Denison family and attending this extraordinary university where over the next four years you will be able to enrich your life with countless academic, social, and extracurricular pursuits.

The Denison Campus Governance Association provides you with this “face book” to assist you in familiarizing yourself with fellow classmates and the opportunities that Denison provides. Approach your experience at Denison with confidence and zeal, knowing that not only do you have this book, but also the support of the entire Denison community to encourage you in your endeavors.

One of the most amazing aspects of Denison is the people—faculty, staff, administration, alumni, and, of course, your peers. Through your academic, social, and extracurricular involvements, you will undoubtedly develop meaningful relationships with these people. I hope that as part of your experience you will take time to learn about the backgrounds and experiences of members of the Denison community. It is because of these conversations and relationships you will be able to grow in many ways at Denison.

As you spend your time on “The Hill,” remember these words from ‘35 Denison alumnus Woody Hayes—“You win with people!”

As your Student Body President, please feel free to use me as a resource during your first year at Denison. I would certainly be delighted to talk with you. Again, welcome to Denison and best of luck as you embark on the most exciting, invigorating, and rewarding four years of your life!

Best wishes,

Julie Black

Student Body President 2004-2005
Denison Campus Governance Association

Greetings, Denisonians,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you, the Class of 2008, to the Denison Community. It was not long ago that I found myself in your position, embarking on the next stage in my life. Let me assure you that everything you have heard about your college years is true; your experiences during the next four will be some of the most exciting, engaging, challenging and rewarding of your life.

During your time at Denison you will have many new opportunities to explore. For the first time you will be able to pursue your own academic interests, hold an office in one of Denison's 150 student organizations, or stay up late talking to one of your peers until four in the morning. Just remember to seize everything Denison has to offer, because, while these are certainly among the best years of your life, they will come and go quickly. Take your next four years and make memories that will last a lifetime.

I look forward to meeting you in the fall and welcome the opportunity to assist you in any way that I can.

Best wishes always,

Charlie Schmidt
Vice-President
